including Shrek, Charlie and The Chocolate Factory, Wicked, Mamma Mia, Anything Goes, and more.

“Usdan’s annual Festival program continues to be a wonderful way to cultivate creativity and support a two-way exchange between established and young artists,” says Lauren Brandt Schloss, Executive Director of Usdan. “Over the course of the summer, Usdan students have the unique opportunity to both present and receive art. In their classes, they make work and start to find their voices. During Festival performances, students get to hear what others have to say and use that to further hone their perspective. That creative dialogue is one that we hope students will continue to foster and embrace throughout their lives — in all of their endeavors.”

To help identify the top choices for this year’s program, the newly-minted Usdan Festival Artistic Director Jonathan Shmidt Chapman enlisted a group of Usdan campers—the first-ever Camper Curatorial Council—to weigh in on a short list of 25 artists, companies, and ensembles who were being considered for the 2018 Festival docket. The campers, representing a range of ages and artistic disciplines, met over the winter, to learn more about artistic programming and debate about what makes a piece of art excellent. From those initial conversations, the students highlighted their own personal favorite performances to help cull the list down to the final docket.

“While many theaters and arts organizations across the country program shows for children and family audiences, young people rarely have a seat at the table in choosing this programming or getting the chance to offer their own opinion in the process,” says Jonathan Shmidt Chapman. “With the Camper Curatorial Council, Usdan is forging a new model for fully engaging young people – not just as audience members – with agency in their own arts experiences, incorporating their voices, ideas and experiences.”

All performances will be presented to campers in the McKinley Amphitheater and videotaped for posterity. Select excerpts will be made available on Usdan’s YouTube channel and on its social media channels.
